ROYAL REVIEW AT HOUNSLOW.

Yesterday morning, at an early hour, the 13th Regiment of Light Dragoons were paraded at their respective cantonnents, round Richmond, Wandsworth, Putney, &c. and marched to Hounslow Heath. On their arrival there, they were inspected by their own Olificers: their clothing and accountrements were all new, and proved in good order; their horses were in high keep.

A little after twelve, the Duke of York, as Field Marshal and Commander in Chief, with his General Staff, came on the ground; and after riding along the lines, which were admirably well dressed, took his station near the upper part of the Heath, the ear of the grand staffin being on the statines Road. His Royal Brothers of Camerines, General of the District, with his Staff; Kent, Cameric, Susex, and Glocorstra, with a numerous retime, soon joined, and the review began with the manueurres of a Regiment of Light Cavalry. The Regiment being composed of ten troops, formed four squadrons; the remaining troops were detacled on the wings and his front, as skirmishers and coverers on the racious movements of the corps against a supposed enemy, which they did with great energy. They then advanced from the main body by troops, alternates by the most of the register and left wings, and retiring through the intervals; those leading to the centre, in like manner advancing and retiring. This was followed by similar maneuvres, by alternate squadrons, which they did with great energy. They then advanced from the main body by troops, alternated with a rapidity and precision, even on the whole line. This was succeeded by advancing on the charge, in like progression, from single troops to the whole line, which was succeeded by advancing on speed, that excited admiration in every beholder.

The Review closed with the detached skirmishers heir general with a rapidity and precision, even on the whole line, experienced with a rapidity and precision, even on the whole line, charging on speed, that excited admiration in every
