dispatches from Osnabr and Moscow—is this, that the Constitutionalists have concentrated 8000 Irish in Catalonia, and that they have appeared 'à la mode' in Estremadura. Of the nature of the fighting between the former and the French army under the Baron d'Esclapart, some idea may be formed from the article which the reader will find in a preceding column.

PARIS, WEDNESDAY NIGHT. Notwithstanding the warlike preparations before Cadix, of which so much is said, nearly every body here is expecting that the next occasion will be a treaty.

DEATH OF THE POPE.

The Paris Papers bring a piece of intelligence from Italy, which, in other times, would have awakened the attention of the Courts of Europe—particularly those of Austria, Prussia, and the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies.

Sir, I feel myself impelled as strongly now as on a former occasion, by a sense of what I owe, in common with every lover of justice and fair dealing, to the cause of truth, to contradict a statement of circumstances alleged to have occurred near Bandon, and copied from the Advertiser of Saturday into your Paper of the same date.

I assert then, Sir, in opposition to the informant of your contemporary, that "several thousands" did not attend the bowling match which he has made the subject of his present slanders; that the people did not disperse on their first day of meeting, however unwilling they may be to draw their wagers, with a determination to resist if interrupted on the morrow, as their peaceable dispersion on that day, also, clearly proved; and that no riot was committed at Mr. Jervis's gate, unless the verification of men of the same party, pursuing themselves home, half undressed, he construed into a riot, until Mr. Jervis and a few of his assistants rushed among them to deprive them of their sticks, &c.

It has been reported several times to day, that commotions had occurred in Cadix, and that the citizens had insisted upon the opening of the gates to the French. The Duke of Angoulême, in the story now is in fact upon his fresh news received beyond the contents of the Advertiser of yesterday.
