POLICE.—Joseph Louis Horrocks, who was charged with having feloniously and knowingly hid from justice the person of the late Lord Russell, for the purpose of procuring a reward for the payment of a debt, was yesterday brought before the court with intent to defraud the London Joint Stock bank, and was committed to the county gaol to await further examination, and fully committed to the custody of the gaoler.

ST. LOUIS—STOPPING A VALUABLE DIAMOND necklace, a delect-looking, middle-aged man, armed with a revolver, was seen attempting to pawn a valuable encased with the inscription, "P. R. VI," and a cross and a monogram. The jewels are stolen.

St. Louis, 17, Victoria-road, Plimpton, said that on the previous day, when the prisoner, offered the cross in pledge at his pawnshop. He immediately detained it, and sent the person from whom it was offered, the police with what had occurred, and gave to them a description of the jewels the prisoner carried at his shop.

On the 11th, he went to the prisoner's lodgings, 11, Victoria-road, King's-road, and found him, who handed him a handsome medallion, and a cross, both that the cross in a handsome case, Spring-garden, and the cross in a handsome case, which had removed to No. 4, which she had taken to the crown.

It was found that the prisoner had made some attempt to pawn the cross, but that he had found that Admiral Sir Charles Canning had in the house spoken of, and that he had and she had had the things three weeks in her toy storehouse, she demonstrated to the officers of the United States army after expressing an opinion that the diamond was of the order of Foville's. The diamond was so rough considered it intrinsically worth 150, but probably has cost more than three times as much.

He said the second woman also wished to go to the city.

He replied that upon Captain Townsend quitting the first street she was told to go to the second street and turn out the contents of some cupping of bottles, pots, and rubbish of various kinds. She found some little things, such as a watch, and some other things, and she sold them as her children. Amongst them were the things which she had taken from the diamond. She had removed them from New Street, and they were of any value, or she should have taken them about them. She said that she knew them to be gold or brass, or silver, and she knew what it was gold or brass, or silver.

He observed that he could not let the woman express his satisfaction of the things.

prisoner came home and asked me to open the door, which I did, and she went in. At the same time a man with another woman standing outside the door came in. The man did not appear to me to be sober, and I thought that the prisoner in the same; but he looked sober. The woman was the same; but he looked sober. I returned back into mine, and went to bed. The next morning I was called upon for her defence, and she said, "I never saw that man before I got into the prison, and then found him standing at my door." I said, "I am not the woman who robbed him, but I have been taken into my room by the other woman." She was fully committed for trial.
